Our Music

From the depths of the Spree and its canals come the River Rats. They drag two guitars, double-bass and violin through the gloomy tunnels of Berlin to their moon-lit sessions. Influenced by the diminished lines of Django Reinhardt, the heart of the variété française and the spirit of world music, the Rats wander between the ragged niches of Kreuzberg's street jams and the glamorous grand theater. With members from France and Germany, the River Rats combine north and the south, dark and light, contemplation and euphoria.

Four Rats

It all started in 2016 when a French violin and an Italian manouche guitar first crossed paths at the shores of river Spree to create the groovy mélange that would soon fill the streets, bars and concert halls of Berlin.

Camille Franc, a classically trained violinist from Paris, moved to Berlin in 2015 and started the band shortly after. He also pursues his singer-songwriter projects "Cam El Niño" and "Chamomile Meadow".

Steffen Vogel has been playing guitar in bands since he was ten years old and brought his passion for all kinds of drums into the quartet.

Matthias Böhme joined the band in 2018 after studying bass and playing with balkan-klezmer band Matou Noir in Hamburg and Freiburg.

Philipp Schönberger was the last one to join the rat family - not only on guitar and sax but also on the flute, jaw harp, percussions and other things that enrich the rats' sound.
